Mehdi Soleimanpour, MD
Nuclear Medicine Director
Radiation Safety Officer

The test or procedure you received today involved the administration of a radioactive isotope. It is not harmful to you or others around you. Due to the increased security measures being taken by public authorities, most forms of public transportation and police related vehicles are now equipped with radiation detection devices. Patients who have undergone nuclear medicine tests or procedures might activate these devices if they come in contact with them.

Please keep this sheet with you and notify any public worker or authority that you have had a nuclear medicine procedure. This should keep you from experiencing any problems or delays. If any concerns or questions arise, please feel free to call: (909) 478-9192, and ask to speak to a nuclear medicine technologist.
